Motorcycle futures market overview

After two years under some type of COVID-19 restrictions at different times over the calendar year, the industry has performed well throughout. As the world recovers and emerges we see the pressures on resources be it energy or materials being the next hurdle. There is a worldwide increase in living costs, spurred on by return to manufacturing creating competition for the bits and bobs everything is made from, the power to make it, and the increase in personal day-to-day costs. There is then the question of the economic fallout which has yet to be clarified and forecast increases in taxes & interest rates add yet another complication to the equation. There are the positives in our industry though, with commuter use during the pandemic keeping registrations similar to previous years as far as absolute registrations are concerned, although at the cost of the reduced number of larger capacity machines. If demand for the leisure rider types continues, as we are currently seeing, there will be difficulties in traders obtaining used stock and as most PCP is concentrated in this area, it bodes well for the risk managers to think there will be continued high demand and subsequently prices for the deals being underwritten now. And trying to remain positive through all this as fuel prices are regularly seeing record highs, the lower costs of running a smaller motorcycle, will as seen in similar circumstances before, attract new users for cost saving daily transport. Coupled with lower availability, again a reason to suspect what we are seeing during research, that not only current strong prices are a consequence, but the situation will continue. As with many previous months no major changes have been made to the forecast values in this edition, and we currently anticipate strong residual values to be maintained.
